Updated: 02/01/2021 by Computer Hope A vertical or horizontal bar commonly on the far right or bottom of a window that lets you move the window viewing area up, down, left, or right. Most people today are familiar with scroll bars because of the need to scroll up and down on almost every Internet web page. Below is an image of a Microsoft Windows window with a vertical and horizontal scroll bar. Scroll bars are utilized using the mouse, touchpad, or keyboard. With a mouse, you can move the scroll bar by clicking the scroll arrow at either end of the scroll bars. You may also click an empty portion of the scroll bar. With a keyboard, you can use the up or down arrow keys to scroll a few lines at a time. The Page Up and Page Down keys or the spacebar scroll down one page at a time. Most computers today include a mouse with a wheel or button, allowing you to scroll up and down, and in some cases, left to right. See the IntelliMouse definition for additional information about these mice. Tip On an Apple computer, some programs, such as Safari, may not display a scroll bar. To scroll up and down in these programs, touch two fingers on your touchpad or touch mouse and drag them up or down. Tip See our touchpad page for other methods of scrolling using a laptop touchpad. How do I use or enable the horizontal scroll bar? The horizontal scroll bar is often missing or disabled because the text or other content being displayed is wrapped or resized to prevent horizontal scrolling. For example, with this web page, there is no horizontal scrolling because it's designed to fit the screen. If you are viewing a page with horizontal scrolling, you can scroll to the right by clicking the right scroll arrow on the horizontal scroll bar. Tip To enable horizontal scrolling on a long text document, you can disable word wrap. When working with images or other documents, zooming in also enables horizontal scrolling. How many scroll bars are in a window? There is often only one scroll bar in a window, which is the vertical scroll bar that lets you scroll up and down in a window. Many programs automatically wrap the text in a window as you change the size of the window or zoom into the document. Programs with a fixed window size or do not have word wrap enabled display a horizontal scroll bar as the window is resized. For these programs, there would be two scroll bars, a horizontal and vertical scroll bar. Both "scroll bar" and "scrollbar" are correct depending on the context and where it's used or the style guide being followed. For most style guides, "scroll bar" as two words is used when describing the bar or feature that lets you scroll, up, down, left, or right. When referring to a configuration, object, or setting "scrollbar" as one word is used. I do not know how this happens and even worse I do not know how to delete/remove. Can anyone help me please. Thanks Mac Windows 7/10; Excel 2013 09-11-2015, 12:23 PM #2 The only way I know of to add a scrollbar would be to go to the Developer tab, get in Design mode, and select and add either a form scrollbar control or an Active-X scrollbar control. Assuming that your staff member would have no idea how to do this, is this a macro-enabled workbook that might have some code that would add it. I wouldn't think so, but I don't have any other ideas. You should be able to delete it by going into Design mode, which then allows you to select and delete the object. Acts 4:12 Salvation is found in no one else, for there is no other name under heaven given to mankind by which we must be saved. 09-11-2015, 09:29 PM #3 Thank you for being the first person not to think that I am hallucinating. There is no macro involved with the page where the scroll bar is appearing. It always appears in column "O" and some time later usually two or three days, it vanishes again. The particular Workbook gets a lot of use as it is used for the business inventory of about 3,000 retail items. You are quite right, I do not have any staff who would be able to intentionally or even accidentally add the scroll bar. The rouge scroll bar also takes the front position so entries in the column are eclipsed behind the bar. Here is what it looks like and thanks for at least taking me seriously. scroll_bar_01.jpg 09-14-2015, 10:03 AM #4 It may be that the scrollbar has been there a long time and something is causing it to be visible or not at different times. Try deleting it: - With the scrollbar visible, in the Controls section of the Developer Tab, click Design Mode (you'll need to add the Developer tab to your ribbon). - Click the scrollbar. It should now be selected, with sizing handles visible. - Press Tab to see if it will tab to any other hidden objects. Delete any that you find, unless they're supposed to be there. - Unselect Design mode and save the workbook. Good luck! 09-14-2015, 09:08 PM #5 Many thanks and well done. You got that 99% right. The original problem seems to have happened because I have been sharing the Workbook on the LAN with Design mode activated. I removed the offending/rouge scroll bar under your instructions and will never again share the workbook in design mode. One final question. I click on the On/Off icon for Design Mode but nothing changes. How does it actually indicate On from Off? 01-09-2018, 08:43 PM #6 An extra scroll bar appeared in one of my columns and I wasn't sharing my file with anyone, nor using macros or developer tools (don't think I even have those). I couldn't get rid of it from the tab I was on, but I saved the workbook and then switched to a different tab. When I switched back, the scroll bar had disappeared. No fair blaming your co-worker. Excel does funny things. 01-09-2018, 08:52 PM #7 Many thanks. Was not really blaming my fellow worker. They were a victim of "coincidence". 08-27-2018, 12:40 PM #8 I don't think this is related to developer mode or a physically placed scrollbar, I think it's a straight up Excel bug, at least in 2013. I notice we all have that. Restore the Excel window (as in, un-maximize), and darned if the real scroll bar doesn't appear in the exact location that it "floats" at maximized. Bingo. You can get rid of it by switching worksheets until it goes away, usually. If you only have one, just create some more. Updating my graphics driver usually resolves display issues like this, but I think it's an actual Excel bug here that Microsoft never fixed. 10-19-2018, 12:55 PM #9 I had the same issue, the way I got it to go away was by splitting my screen (under the view tab) and then re-splitting. This worked for me. Click on View Ribbon, then Click on Split and then Click on Split again. Thanks very much for posting the solution. Once I did this, the Vertical bar in the middle of the Excel sheet disappeared. Have you tried to disable any add-ins to see if they may be causing the issue? Also, is this a shared workbook? If so, it may be worth a shot to un-share and re-share it to see if the problem goes away. Hi Garak0410, It seems similar to this problem: can also try: Close workbook and Excel. Open ONLY Excel, use the menu "File | Open" BUT click the little triangle at the right end of the "Open" button. Pick "Open and Repair". Do it to both of the files. Hope this helps, CheersSte We have had similar issues with a shared spreadsheet and could not find a solution. Again it only happened to a single user and no one else although she did use it a lot more than the others. I have seen similar happen. It sounds strange but check her video driver. Uninstall and reinstall or update if needed. The video chip set may have an issue rendering the sheet sometimes and this can happen. The only way I know of to add a scrollbar would be to go to the Developer tab, get in Design mode, and select and add either a form scrollbar control or an Active-X scrollbar control. Assuming that your staff member would have no idea how to do this, is this a macro-enabled workbook that might have some code that would add it. Update on this - I decided to rebuild her PC, loaded all drivers, even Dell Firmware and System Drivers, .problem persists. So guessing video card replacement is next. Update - I replaced video card same problem. But here's the thing. For some reason, she prefers her Windows to be partially maximized, .about 3/4 maximized. While this for sure is a user preference, could this be a reason why she is seeing it and no one else is? And how it might be an office problem, considering I wiped her PC clean and installed a new video card? Another UPDATE - Replaced PC, different hardware, more memory, .same problem... And how it might be an office problem, considering I wiped her PC clean and installed a new video card? It has to be related to her preference for 3/4 sized Windows, correct? What else can it be? Happens on no other PC with this sheet. All -- As of now, it seems to me this is still a bug in Excel 2013 and/or Windows 7. This behaviour is not normal, simply not right. The problem persists for me. Yes, it is a shared Excel file. No, there are no macros in it. Yes, macros are disabled. Yes, deleting all files in... C:\Users\YourUserNameGoesHere\AppData\Roaming\Microsoft\Excel\...does make it go away but this is only temporary. Using Windows 7 fully patched. Yes, my video card is modern and fully patched. If you have a fix not mentioned, please advise. Note that things like "rebooting" and "closing Excel and opening Excel" and "unsharing and sharing the file" are not really fixes, and I have tried them, and none is a permanent fix. I guess the root of the bug may be in outdated OS (Windows 7) and in an outdated version of Excel (Excel 2013), but sadly I cannot change either of those. If you have new good information, I would love to hear it. Thanks. -- Mark Kamoski I've truly given up on this. A single user, rebuilt PC, different PC, all updates and current drivers. And she is the only one here that uses non-minimized Windows so that has something to do with it. If anyone else is experiencing this same issue it's due to -> frozen row. Go to View -> Freeze Panes -> Unfreeze. Yup Excel is becoming very unreliable with every new release. GIVE THIS MAN A CIGAR!!!! Thanks bro, you saved me a lot of time, energy, effort, and useless trials Had this problem with a user today (Windows 10/Office 365 alls current). The first thing I did was unfreeze panes,phantom scrollbars were gone, no-froze and they didn't come back. I came here to see if it was a known problem and first thread, bingo!The user had a very wide table (~390 columns) and the phantom scrollbar seemed to appear at the place where Excel would normally show the dotted line for a page break.I'm not sure how long/wide the others' tables were, but I'm wondering if the size (13 months worth of columns) may have confused Excel? He also had the worksheet zoomed out (70-80%), so size and zoom combination? If you have restore points set - save the file as a different name, then restore the original file to a previous version. Use the re-named old file to add any info that is missing in the restored file.
